The outline of the defense was that Kellogg was not responsible for any fraud committed after E. S. Dean Company had become a corporation. Previously, when Kellogg was alleged manager of the original E. S. Dean & Co, the attorney declared, no one who invested in the Dean Safe Investment System ever lost a cent.

Kellogg, it was claimed, did not become an officer or a stockholder in the corporation. In its organization he was excluded.

Regarding the circulars and advertisements written by Kellogg, counsel said they were signed by the E. S. Dean Company.

The defense outlined was a general disclaimer of responsibility for acts of the corporation.

Mr. Olcott then argued that though not a prima facie member of the E. S. Dean Company, Kellogg was the main New York. You never hear them say New York. You never hear them say New York is better than any other city.

Mr. Oleott then argued that though and says a New York.

Dean Company, Kellogy was the main factor in its organisation and a daily accomplice in its management. The statute provided for indirect as well as direct connection with fraud.

Kellogy had been shown to be in daily consultation with the officers of the company and to have participated in the regular division of the money.

Mr. McCurdy rejoined that the proceduting attorney had assumed that Kellogs, as owner of E. S. Dean & Co., had transferred it to the corporation. What he did after the organisation of the corporation was his duty as an agent, for which the corporation alone is responsible.
